

Kimberly A. Hulsey
Vice President, Legal and Government Affairs

June 20, 2016

Via ECFS
Marlene H. Dortch, Esq.
Secretary
Federal Communications Commission
445 Twelfth Street, SW
Washington, DC 20554

Notice of ex parte presentation: In the Matter of Expanding Consumers' Video Navigation Choices, MB Docket No. 16-42; Commercial Availability of Navigation Devices, CS Docket No. 97-80

Dear Ms. Dortch:

On June 16, 2016, Jared Sher of 21st Century Fox, Inc., Kyle Dixon of Time Warner Inc., Anne Lucey of CBS, and Keith Murphy of Viacom Inc., and the undersigned (collectively, "the Content Companies") met with Commissioner Jessica Rosenworcel and her Legal Advisors, Marc Paul and Jennifer Thompson, regarding the above-referenced proceeding.

In the meeting, the Content Companies discussed the "apps"-based approach for promoting competition among navigation devices introduced by the National Cable Television Association, AT&T, attorney Paul Glist and others on June 15, 2016. The Content Companies expressed appreciation for an alternative to the initially proposed set top box proposal and further conveyed that the apps-based alternative appeared to be a constructive step but additionally explained that any alternative would require evaluation in the context of the principles contained in the comments and reply comments filed by the Content Companies in this proceeding. The Content Companies also emphasized that any alternative option would need to provide assurances that their valuable content will not be disturbed, modified, altered or added to in any way that deviates from the contractual licensing provisions and restrictions they reach with MVPDs.

Sincerely,

Kimberly Hulsey
Vice President, Legal and Government Affairs
Scripps Networks Interactive

cc: Jessica Rosenworcel
Marc Paul
Jennifer Thompson